GROVE WILL BE PITCHER

Martin Stands Out in Triumph
As the Hero of The
GameBy James L. Kilgallen
(I. N. S. Sports Writer)

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 3.—Pepped up by "Pepper" Martin and the fact they have tied the World Series in a knot, the St. Louis Cardinals—a rejuvenated, fighting ball club—prepared to entrain at noon today for Philadelphia where on Monday they will resume hostilities with Connie Mack's Athletics in the third game of the annual baseball classic.

The A's already have departed by special train and this morning were half way home. Three games will be played in Philadelphia and if the issue is not then decided, the teams will return to St. Louis. Indications are that "Lefty" Grove will be selected to pitch the opening game in Philadelphia for the A's while Manager Gabby Street's choice for mound duty probably will be Burleigh Grimes.

Betting odds on the series have tightened up to a close to even money. The interest in the series has picked up tremendously and so has the betting.

The morale of the Cardinals has risen to a high point as a result of their thrilling victory in the second game of the series. They are now a chirping, confident flock of red birds, eager to "go." Their confidence has been accentuated by the prospect that "Sparky" Adams, their regular third baseman who has been out of the series as a result of a sprained ankle probably will be able to start in Monday's game.

Everywhere baseball men congregated today animated discussions held forth on yesterday's thriller. The postmortems revolved around the following four features of the contest:

1—"Pepper" Martin's sensational base-running and batting.

2—Catcher Jimmy Wilson's strange play with two down in the ninth when he threw to third instead of first after Pinch Hitter Jimmy Moore had struck out on a low curve that Wilson scooped up on the first bound.

3—"Wild Bill" Hallahan's three-hit shut-out of the A's.

4—"Sunny Jim" Bottomley's spectacular catch of a foul ball with three men on base in the ninth for the last put out of the game.

Martin stood out in triumph as the hero of the St. Louis attack and the "spark plug" of the team. His base running and terrific hitting electrified the Cardinal club and rosters and transformed the team from a mediocre looking aggregation into a winning combination.

"Pepper" scored both of the Cardinals' runs as a result of clean hitting and hair raising base running. In the second inning, Martin hit a clean drive to left and when Simmons slipped in fielding the ball and fumbled it momentarily he dashed to second and made the bag by a headlong slide, face first. A moment later he stole third with another headlong slide and scored on Wilson's long fly to Haas in center.

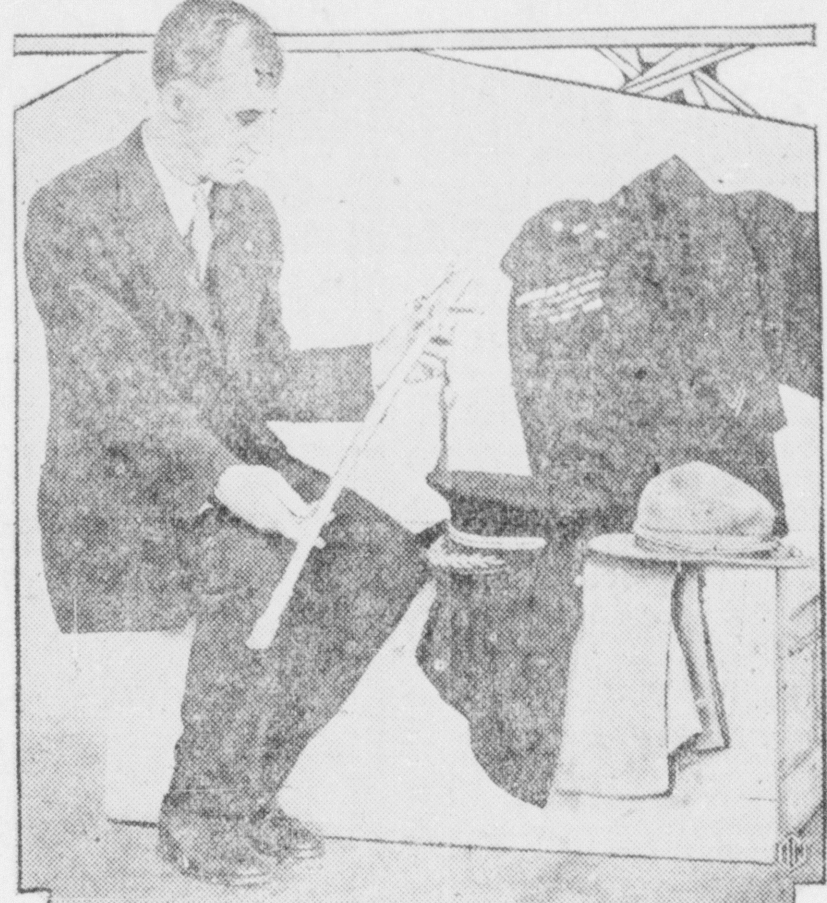

Martin opened the seventh inning with a single to left, his fifth safe hit of the series and promptly stole second, sliding hands first into the bag ahead of Cochrane's rifle-like throw. "Pepper" raced to third on an infield out and then Manager Street flashed a signal for a "squeeze play" Gelbert bunted to the first base side of the diamond. Pitcher Earnshaw was on the ball quickly and tossed the ball to Cochrane who was blocking the plate. By another great slide, this time hooking the plate, Martin scored a second before Mickey tagged him.

"Pepper" bids fair to be the hero of the series. He has been officially at bat seven times and has rung up five hits, two of them doubles. He has stolen three bases and his fielding has been faultless.

Hallahan's remarkable pitching was almost overshadowed by the other spectacular features of the game. Although "Wild Bill" walked seven men he was invincible in the tight places. Bill showed the folks that he has real courage. He now figures as the biggest pitching menace in the way of the A's efforts to capture their third consecutive world's championship.

"Wild Bill" allowed but three scattered singles, made by Haas, Fox and Miller. He pitched carefully to Cochrane and Simmons, the A's sluggers. Twice Cochrane walked, but on the other two times up Mickey could not touch Hallahan's delivery. Simmons, in four times up, went hitless. It was one of those most magnificent exhibitions in the history of World Series competition. The A's recall, too, that it was Hallahan who shut them out in the third game of the 1930 World Series and they are now figuring on ways and means of scoring on him.

Are His Fighting Days Over?

Although Major General Smedley D. Butler, renowned Marine Corps veteran who was recently retired upon his own request, is shown putting away his uniform, cap and sword with a touch of regret, there is no indication that the fighting days of the fiery "leatherneck" are over. Snapped in his home at Newton Square, Pa., as he sheaths a sword that has seen decades of valiant service, General Butler, for the first time in 33 years, is enjoying the life of a civilian.

ACROBATIC DANCERS TO BE AT FATHERS' ASS'N.Pupils of Professor William J.
Herman's Class to Be Present, Here

URGE MEN TO ATTEND

Professor William J. Herman's class of acrobatic dancers and tumblers, from Philadelphia, will be the attraction at the regular monthly meeting of the Bristol Fathers' Association to be held in the high school auditorium, Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

This is the same class which gave such a delightful performance here in the high school auditorium last spring. Included within the class is William J. Herman, Jr., present champion tumbler of America. He will lead the American tumbling team in the Olympics of next year. He is nineteen years of age and a finished artist.

Other members of the class are: Betty Protz, present title holder of the Middle Atlantic Division in tumbling; Ida Korensky, present junior champion in tumbling in the same area; Mary Moss, present junior champion in artistic acrobatics of the Middle Atlantic Division; Nellie Souther, senior champion of the Middle Atlantic Division in artistic acrobatics; Little Mickey Bradley, five-year-old tumbling champion of the Middle Atlantic Division.

The exhibition which the class gave last spring made a big hit and it was talked about for weeks afterward. Many of the men in the Fathers' Association expressed regret that the older children in the schools were not given an opportunity to witness the entertainment. This time, however, the students of the junior high school, about 400 in number, are to be invited to be present. The children will be requested to bring their fathers along with them.

An added feature will be a professional wrestling match. Some time ago the Fathers' Association staged a wrestling bout between two well-known professional wrestlers, and it proved to be one of the most interesting spectacles ever witnessed in the town. The coming bout will undoubtedly be an attractive feature of the entertainment.

Every member of the association is urged not only to be present himself, but to bring a male friend along with him. The dues for 1932 can be paid at this meeting.

Testimony was given before Squire W. Carlisle Hobensack at yesterday's hearing, by Mrs. Katherine Hartman, a neighbor of Malone. The woman stated she had seen Malone enter his home on July 24th and set fire to the place.

NATURAL BRIDGE TRIP
LEADS TO CAVES ALSOAutomobile Tour Through Shenandoah Valley Will Long Be Remembered

HISTORICAL POINTS

Down, the picturesque Shenandoah Valley, through the famous cavern and grotto lands to Natural Bridge, the Keystone Automobile Club has outlined a most delightful motor tour.

"Side trips to many interesting vacation playgrounds as well as scores of historic shrines can be made from central points along the route," says Russell B. Carty, Representative of the motor club. "Natural Bridge is 33 miles from Bristol by this route."

From Bristol the tour leads over the Roosevelt Boulevard to Philadelphia. Leaving Philadelphia over Woodland avenue then continuing over Route 13 through Wilmington to the village of State Road where the travelers bear to the right into U. S. Route 40 leading through Baltimore, Frederick and Middletown. From this point Maryland State Route 33 leads to the junction of U. S. Route 340 where a turn to the right takes you through the highly scenic regions of Harpers Ferry and Berryville to Winchester.

In addition to its charming location in the heart of the fertile fruit growing portion of the Shenandoah Valley, Winchester contains relics dating back to the days when George Washington was employed here as a surveyor. The town is founded on the site of ancient Fort Loudoun, erected to protect the settlers against Indians. During the Civil War it was the center of hard fighting and the city changed hands many times during the four year conflict. Southward over the national highway the travelers reach the cavern lands lying between Strasburg and Harrisburg.

Exploration of these underground wonderlands is a fascinating pastime. Near Strasburg are Crystal Caverns while at Woodstock other noted grotto lands can be visited. In the vicinity of New Market are found the picturesque Endless Caverns and the Grottoes of the Shenandoah while a side trip from New Market leads into the heart of the scenic Shenandoah National Park to the Caverns of Luray. In addition to a series of caverns located near Harrisburg the latter town is also the gateway for a side trip to the famous Cyclopean Towers, or Chimney Rocks, curious formations of limestone formed by nature in the shape of giant chimneys.

From Harrisburg a 25-mile drive leads to Staunton, a picturesque old Virginia town which is said to contain more education institutions than any other town its size in the country. Here stands the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson, still being used as a Presbyterian Manse. Eastward a side trip can be taken to Charlottesville, seat of the University of Virginia and Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson. Westward from Staunton another side trip leads to White Sulphur Springs, noted as a vacation resort for more than 200 years. Below Staunton lies Lexington, with its fine old Washington and Lee University. In the memorial chapel on the campus is buried General Robert E. Lee and Lexington too is the resting place of Stonewall Jackson. A drive of 14 miles south from the city leads to Natural Bridge.

Miss Elena Rezentseva,
Member of Nobility

LUNCHEON ATTRACTS 68

Russia's problems and the manner in which she is solving them were explained in a most colorful manner by Miss Elena Rezentseva, a native of that vast country, as she addressed members of the Bristol Travel Club at the initial meeting of the season in the club home, Cedar street, yesterday.

The business meeting and program followed a luncheon served at one o'clock to 68 Travel Club women.

Officers of the club acted as hostesses, and Miss Rezentseva was introduced by Mrs. Horace H. Burton, president.

The native of Russia, a member of the Russian nobility, gave information regarding the Russian Revolution when she was located in Siberia. Her activities as a Red Cross nurse furnished a splendid background for her dramatic and well-told tale of hardships in Siberia in those trying times.

Miss Rezentseva's mastery of six languages enabled her in those earlier years to prove of great service to her fellowmen, as she found extensive work as an interpreter. Her education and the fluent manner in which she spoke in so many tongues were responsible for the fact that she was more fortunate than many of the nobility. She was treated with due respect in the time of the country's great trials, and was able to give much in service. The speaker stated she endeavored to understand the aims and principles of the Soviet Government at that time.

Questions asked by the club women were readily answered in a most interesting way. In answer to queries relative to religion in Russia today, Miss Rezentseva told that services are being continued in the churches and homes, but they are not recognized by the government. She continued by mentioning that a new religion is springing up, many who greatly re-

PA. INSPECTORS VISIT
MORRISVILLE SCHOOLSPleased With Work of School,
But Antipathy Toward
Large Classes

550 ARE IN HIGH SCHOOL

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 3.—The past week saw the Morrisville high school enrollment cross the 550 mark. At the same time State inspectors visited the high school, and, although they were well pleased with the work of the school showed decided antipathy towards the large number of pupils in many classes. They complained of the lack of sufficient number of teachers for the number of pupils now attending high school here.

Morrisville, high's unexpected 14 per cent increase in enrollment creates 22 periods a week with sections of 45 pupils and 12 periods a week with sections of 46 pupils. One study period in library and one gymnasium class exceeds 60 pupils. The latter case has been partially adjusted. There are a large number of classes meeting that have from 40 to 44 pupils.

The state department officials set 35 as a maximum for most classes and do not object seriously to a few sections over that limit unless they go above 40 pupils. They maintain that Morrisville only has the equivalent of 19 teachers which is derived by the following manner:

There are fifteen teachers—a full time teacher and librarian, health supervisor, Miss Gish devoting two-thirds of her time to teaching; a principal, Mr. Boehm, who teaches one-third of his time; music supervisor, Miss Ellis, who teaches in high school one-half of her time, and art supervisor, Miss Mensinger, who teaches one-half of her time—giving the equivalent of 19 teachers.

Morrisville's increase in enrollment could easily have been absorbed had these students selected the small academic sections. But inasmuch as there was practically no increase in academic students in grades 10, 11 and 12, the increase went to the general and commercial courses, which under normal conditions were filled, typing and bookkeeping have heavy enrollment this year.

A BRIEF ILLNESSYachtsman and Merchant
Prince Passes Away Peacefully in His Sleep

WAS 81 YEARS OLD

LONDON, Oct. 3.—Sir Thomas Lipton, fine old sea dog and one of the world's great merchant princes, died yesterday. He was 81.

The cause of his death was a heart attack which followed a severe chill he caught while motoring several days ago. For the last year his health had been a cause of recurrent anxiety.

Sir Thomas died peacefully in his sleep. Several old time friends were at the bedside, but no near relatives, as he is the last of his family.

He died without attaining the great objective of his life, on which he had spent huge sums from a fortune made primarily from tea—the winning of the America's Cup. Instead he won the epitaph, "the world's best loser," and the affectionate admiration of millions on both sides of the Atlantic.

His fifth and last attempt to wrest "that elusive old mug," as he always called the trophy symbolizing yachting supremacy, was made in September last year when the Shamrock V was beaten by the Enterprise off Rhode Island.

The first Homemakers' School to be conducted by the Courier took place last year and proved to be one of the most successful affairs in this area. There was great interest aroused in the school and the audiences were composed of residents from all sections of Bucks county.

Every effort will be made this year to make the 1931 school a greater success than its predecessor.

Catches 29-Pound Carp
In Neshaminy Creek

LANGHORNE, Oct. 3.—The record for catching the second largest carp in North America goes to Frank Adam, Fruitville, west of East Greenville, who landed a carp in Neshaminy Creek, near here. The fish weighed 29 pounds, was 41 inches long, 25 inches around the middle and 19½ inches across the middle. Henry F. Jacob, also of Fruitville caught an 18-pound, 32-inch carp at the same place at the same time.

Up to six months ago a 28-pound carp, caught in the Perkiomen creek at Schwenksville in 1929, was the record for North America.

However, six months ago the present world's record was established when a 42-pound carp was caught in the Rappahannock river in Virginia. Seth Briggs, New York fishing authority, in writing about Mr. Adams' catch, says: "Had it not been for this comparatively recent catch, this 29-pound fish would have put one over on the previous record fish of 25 pounds. In any event, Mr. Adams has good reason to be proud of his catch."

Site to Be Dedicated as State Park; Plan for Amusement Thruout Year

Governor Pinchot has named Saturday, October 17th, at 3 p. m., as the date for the meeting in the Delaware Valley at which time the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will take over the Delaware Canal in the southeastern portion of the State, from the Lehigh Coal & Navigation Company.

The exact location of the meeting will be announced later and it is being planned to make the affair quite an event.

On the date given the canal company will turn the canal over to the state highway department, which in turn will transfer it to the State Department of Forests and Waters, to be held in perpetuity as a State park.

The canal is 40 miles in length, extending along the Pennsylvania shore of the Delaware River from Yardley to Raubsville, with the tow-path between the canal and the river.

In addition to Governor Pinchot, others participating in the ceremonies on October 17 will include Governor Morgan F. Larson, of New Jersey and Senator Clarence J. Buckman, of Bucks County.

The site is to be used as a public park maintained by the State.

The intentions are to lay out attractive grass plots, and to provide some features of recreation. The canal, it is stated, is to be filled with water for skating during the winter and in summer to be used as swimming pool.

Fire Starts When Chicken
Flies Against Lantern

Fire last night did considerable damage on the farm of Steven Turnicky, two miles south of Danboro.

Mr. Turnicky was catching chickens in a shed adjoining the barn. He had a lantern sitting on the floor and a chicken flew against the lantern upsetting it.

Mr. Turnicky attempted to fight the flames while his wife summoned fire companies. Firemen from Doylestown, Plumsteadville and Dublin responded. The firemen saved a silo, garage, automobile and some other farm machinery.

Two horses were led from a nearby stable.

IT'S A GREAT GAME

A quarter of a million boys are playing football in the United States this fall. This somewhat definite figure helps an understanding of the universality of the game in this country.

The number includes players on the squads of 567 colleges and 70,000 high schools in the 48 states. Take other than high school and college teams, take the thousands who try for their teams and fail, take scrub games on recreation fields and corner lots, and how many more participate? The grand total might well be a million.

As developed from the British rugby by changes of the rules during more than 40 years, the game has become well-nigh wholly an American one. Its widespread organization is distinctly American.

Deplorable casualties, including an occasional death, still occur, but have been minimized by the rules of recent years. The prominence of the game, insures their mention and increased participation increases the chances of injury. There seems reason for believing that the casualties in the organized game now existing are less in number than would be true among such a vast number in unorganized competitions of all sorts which inevitably would result if this outlet for youth's instinctive love of physical contests did not exist.

There are dangers: Lack of organization and proper direction at the bottom, hence helter-skelter struggles, mere fights; and overemphasis of the game in crack schools and universities, with commercialism a sinister factor. Still, we should say that the size of our football game is to be taken as a sign of healthy, vigorous, sturdy manhood to come. It should breed discipline, co-operative action, skill, courage, a brave spirit and readiness of body and mind.

YOUTH AND AGE

A nation-wide survey made by the American Federation of Labor has demonstrated that from an industrial standpoint a man is old at 45 and not wanted in thousands of industrial plants. Even Uncle Sam will not allow men of 45 and over to enter the postal service.

Even if 45 as distinguished from 44 marked a definite step downward, it would still be ridiculous from an economic standpoint. The nation that found no employment for men of 45 and over would have to provide for them, anyhow. The firm that refused to pay him a wage would find itself paying in taxes the equivalent of his dole and getting no return.

If the copyright owners of certain current ditties withheld the special permission, it would be quite all right.

Mr. Dreiser says he feels the same now as he did when he didn't know where the next month's rent was coming from. But how does the landlady feel?

In a time of ancient glory the rubies belonged to a czarina. They were great and glowing and red—red as blood, and through generations blood had been shed for them. Last to die was their owner, Prince Murinov, who defied a revolutionary mob while his servant, Federoff, escaped from the burning castle and hid them in a cave.

Ten years have passed. Federoff returns and recovers the gems. With him is Frank Severn, who represents Prince Murinov's granddaughter, to whom the rubies now rightfully belong. Federoff undertakes to smuggle them out of Russia. He disappears and Severn secretly returns to his lonely country home in England, Beggar's Court. He urgently summons his friend, Jim Wynter, who meets Felix Sant, Severn's lawyer.

These two find Severn's house lighted but silent, with a watch-dog lying dead of poison in the hallway. In vain they call out, "Severn! Severn!"

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER VI

"Why didn't Severn take me into his confidence the night we met, before this inexplicable thing happened?" broke out Sant with a helpless gesture. "Well, I suppose we've got to call in the police now. He pledged me to secrecy about his being here, but how can one keep it a secret in the face of this?"

Almost across his words Jim Wynter's voice broke startlingly, touched by a sudden, queer, excited note:

"Sant—Sant! Look!"

In one corner of this room where they had found the overturned chair was a long old-fashioned wall-mirror that reached almost to the floor. Wynter was pointing at something, his eyes had just caught there, half hidden behind an article of furniture, on the lower part of the mirror. Quickly Sant crossed over to him, saw it too; some words faintly traced, as if by a finger tip, in the dust on the glass:

"S O S. For God's sake—"

For a startled moment the two men stared dumbly at the broken, poignant words—from Severn? But whom else?

INEXPLICABLE DRAMA

It was as if Severn had tried desperately to give his friends a message or a clue to the inexplicable drama that must have been played out tonight in this lonely, mist-enclosed house, and had been prevented from finishing what he had endeavored to trace there. Something very dark and sinister behind that unfinished message!

With a white, unnerved face Sant strode to the telephone to ring up the police.

Some twenty minutes later brought a couple of police over by car from the neighboring town.

Sant and Wynter had meanwhile made a search of the outbuildings. The only discovery there was that the Beggar's Court motor car was no longer in the garage. In the house itself they made a discovery that might or might not have a bearing on the mystery.

Lying on the hearth in the room where Severn had been sitting was the torn half of a playing card—or rather, the "joker" of the pack. There was one penciled word on it—not in Severn's handwriting—possibly one of other words forming a sentence written on the missing half of the card, that doubtless had been burnt. The one word was "silver."

The police from Trayne were put in possession of the facts. They, too, made an exhaustive search of the house, but with no results to throw any further light on this mystery.

About 10 o'clock a car was heard proceeding up the drive—a sound that drew Sant to the door, to peer out eagerly into the deepening mist. The three figures in the car, as it approached the radius of light through the open door, proved to be the servants of the establishment. The newcomers seemed startled at the sight of the police there.

"Martin," broke out Sant impatiently, "can you tell us anything about Mr. Severn?"

Martin was a man of 50, who, with his wife, had been left in charge of Beggar's Court during Severn's absence abroad. The third was a younger man called Creyke.

"I don't understand, sir," Martin looked surprised at the question. "Is anything the matter?"

"How is it that all three of you, the entire household staff, were out this evening," demanded the police inspector.

"Because Mr. Severn gave us permission," retorted Martin, staring at the speaker, "as he'll tell you himself."

A DESERTED HOUSE

"Unfortunately, Mr. Severn is not here to tell us anything," said the inspector drily. "Mr. Sant and this gentleman came here tonight at half-past seven to find the house absolutely deserted, no sign of Mr. Severn—"

"But we left him here," cried Mrs. Martin, her voice startled. "We'd arranged to go to the pictures with my sister at Trayne, and Mr. Severn said we needn't stay in just because he had a gentleman coming; that if we laid supper before we went out it would be all right—and that Creyke could drive us in the car."

"Why, of course," Mrs. Martin cried in surprise—"or we shouldn't have gone."

Evidently there was nothing to be learned from the servants. They had motored off about six; there had been no sign of anything amiss then. Whatever it was that had happened at this lonely house must have occurred between that hour and half-past seven.

"Isn't it rather odd Mr. Severn should have left all the servants going out when he was expecting a guest?" said the inspector to Sant later.

"Perhaps so. Yet I don't know," said Sant thoughtfully. "Mr. Severn's always doing the unexpected thing—and he's good nature itself. I suppose he didn't want them to be disappointed."

"Quite trustworthy, so far as you know, these servants?"

"Quite, so far as I know," said Sant. "Martin and his wife were with the late Mr. Severn for years. Creyke, too, was here in his time."

Presently the police took their departure.

"There's nothing further we can do tonight, sir," the inspector said. "We seem to be up against a blank wall, and no mistake. We shall be here first thing in the morning. Shall we find you here?"

"Yes, I shall stay the night here," Sant's round, humorous face looked anxious and worried. "I want to be on the spot should there be developments."

Wynter was remaining, too. Severn, in his letter, had asked him to stay the night.

"What's one to make of it?" broke out Sant, helplessly, as the police drove off. "It makes me afraid, remembering those other disappearance cases . . . weeks ago now—and to this day not a trace of any one of those three men. Vanished as utterly as a stone drops out of sight in deep water! And now poor Frank Severn a fourth!"

OUT OF THE NIGHT

It was long before sleep came that night to Jim Wynter, with his mind groping in the dark labyrinth of that troubling riddle.

What had happened in this lonely house between the hours of 6 and half-past 7?

Jim Wynter awoke with a start, with that wild cry that had broken through his troubled dreams still echoing in his ears:

"Wynter—Wynter! Help!"

Like the voice of a man in desperate flight from overtaking enemies, screaming out in the last extremity of fear—and Frank Severn's voice!

Wynter started up in bed, half wondering even yet in that first confused moment if he had only imagined that strange cry, if it had not been just part of a vivid dream.

But not a dream! Swiftly on the top of that vague doubt, out of the night's enfolding silence came that voice again, still far away in the mist-wrapped grounds beyond the window—a hoarse, half-articulate cry this time, that seemed to snap off abruptly like a frayed fiddle-string.

Frank Severn out there in the hands of those unknown enemies! With a startled thrill Wynter had sprung out of bed and dashed across to the window. The luminous dial of his watch told that it was a little more than an hour past midnight.

He flung open the window wide. Outside the mist, faintly irradiated by moonlight, was like a spectral palpable sea beating up against the panes, that muffled sound and hid away completely from his eyes the night's furtive secrets.

"Severn!" he cried out loudly—"Severn!"

There was no answering voice from out of the white, ghostly drift, no sound save the fitful gusts of rising wind that drowned the stirring of any stealthy movements in the grounds below, no clue to what was happening out there in the heart of the muffled, mysterious silence.

In a fever of haste Wynter flung on some clothes and ran out of the room. Footsteps were already stirring in the room opposite where Sant slept; a knife-edge of light gleamed beneath the door. As Wynter raced out into the corridor the other door opened and Sant's white, startled face peered out. He caught at Wynter's arm.

"What is it?" he cried in a strained voice. "What has happened?"

In his impatient haste Wynter shook off the detaining hand.

"Hurry into some clothes, Sant; rouse the servants! Severn's out there in the fog! I heard his cry for help just now. It's amazing, but he can never have been far from Beggar's Court from the time he vanished!"

The last words were flung over his shoulder as Wynter raced along the corridor. He took the stairs three at a time, ran across the hall to a side door that opened on to the garden. In feverish haste he dragged back the bolts, dashed out into the open.

No sound met him out of the stealthy hush of the surrounding mist except the dreary muttering of the rising night wind. The mist baffled his sense of direction. From which quarter had that desperate cry from Severn come—Severn, as he was convinced, in the hands of those unknown enemies? Strange to think that from the time of his disappearance last night the missing man, for all their search, could never have been far away from Beggar's Court, a prisoner in some cunning hiding place, to make this strange night's mystery deeper still.

Out there in the fog he paused, listening for some clue to guide him. Then suddenly, far away out of the mist-bound distance, he saw the sudden blurred gleam of a moving light, as if from an electric torch. Instantly Wynter plunged forward in the direction of that will-o'-the-wisp gleam.

CARDINAL AND GRAY BLANK NEWTOWN BOYS

Romping through at will, Bristol High's football eleven broke through Newtown's first and secondary defenses to chalk up two touchdowns in honor of the Big Gray yesterday afternoon on the former's gridiron. The final foot of the whistle found the Cardinal and Gray leading the Newtown bulldozers by the score of 12 to 0.

Several spectacular end runs, ranging from 35 to 50 yards by Swan, Gaffney and Tosti were the features of the game.

Cole, Neindorff, Gallagher, and Britton starred on the defense for the invaders, stopping several plays which otherwise would have resulted in large gains.

Although Newtown was slightly lighter than Bristol, the Cardinal and Gray's starting line-up contained only five regulars. On the offense both teams were very poor due to imperfect timing, with the Cardinal and Gray having a slight advantage on the defense due to their overwhelming strength.

The first quarter started with Bristol getting under way with plenty of "snap and pep." Immediately after receiving possession of the ball on their own 30 yard line, Gaffney and Swan tore off spectacular end runs of 30 and 35 yards, respectively, advancing the pigskin to Newtown's 5 yard line. The period ended with the Cardinal and Gray still in possession of the oval on the Big Blue's 5 yard line.

The second stanza opened with Cole putting the finishing touches to the good work done in the previous quarter by taking the ball over on a line back for Bristol's initial tally of the game. The try for extra point failed. In the latter part of this canto the Cardinal and Gray scored its second consecutive touchdown when in the last few minutes of play, with Newtown in possession of the ball on their own 15 yard line, Neindorff blocked Shields' kick, recovering it on Newtown's 5 yard line. Swan then scored Bristol's second six-pointer on a center plunge. The try for extra point failed.

The remainder of the game was merely a series of substitutions on the part of Coach Townsend and a general workout for the local boys. Incidentally, Newtown scored their only first down during the fourth period.

Next Friday afternoon, Bristol plays Langhorne at Langhorne.

BRISTOL A. A. ELEVEN TO TRY FOR 2ND WIN

Having made an auspicious home team debut, the Bristol A. A. eleven will try for its second win of the season on Sullivan's field tomorrow when it meets the strong Fern Rock team.

Last week the A's opened the season with a 6-0 win over the Daytona Triangles and were very impressive although at times the team did not seem to click together. During the past week Coach Corrigan has put his men under several practices correcting the faults of the opening game and expects a great deal of better playing against Fern Rock.

Several of the locals showed good stuff last week, particularly "Eddie" Roe and "Petie" Court, the wingmen who brought down most of the opposing backs of the Daytona team. Hutchinson, the signal barker, showed great ability in running the plays and also in hitting the line. Dougherty got off some very nice punts.

With the nervousness of the opening game completely gone, the new players, Allen, Kichline, Kornstedt and Lynch are anxious to show their wares in the second scheduled fray of the year.

Fern Rock has appeared here on numerous occasions and always managed to give the Bristol team a hard battle and finishing on the front several times.

The fray will begin at three o'clock, sharp.

STATE NEWS

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Oct. 3.—(INS)—One of the most unusual murder trials ever conducted in Pennsylvania is being held here today with a dog in the role of defendant.

A little-known and seldom-invoked state law will be called into play to conduct the trial—if City Controller George Zimmerman can locate the defendant.

The proceeding was begun when Mrs. Andrew Zimmerman filed with the controller a complaint that the dog had killed thirteen giant rabbits at her home. The rabbits, breeding and show stock, were valued at $3 each. Nearby residents reported that a large shepherd dog had been seen skulking about the Zimmerman home and it is believed the rabbits were killed by the shepherds.

The city controller explained that legislation enacted some time ago empowers him to sit as a committing magistrate in the case, should the dog be found and identified. The law provides, Zimmerman explained, that an investigation and hearing be held in the best approved court style, with witnesses for defense and prosecution appearing before him.

If the dog is found guilty of killing the rabbits, he may be sentenced to death. Should he escape, the controller said, Mrs. Zimmerman can collect damages from the state bureau of animal industry.

HARRISBURG.—Construction of traffic tunnels under Pennsylvania's state capital, to relieve congestion in streets leading to "The Hill" and to permit tourists and visitors to view the capital environs in their entirety without the discomfort of motor jams, has been suggested by E. W. Hess, an engineer, of Clearfield and Dubois.

Citing the development in Philadelphia, where subway and footway tunnels were carried under city hall there, Hess claimed there is no insuperable engineering problem to tunneling under the capitol building. The formation of the land which would be pierced, he said, indicates that the underlying rock strata is capable of bearing great stress and chief engineering work would be that of insuring safety to the foundations of the State House.

Hess's plan contemplates a vehicular tunnel starting at State street, west of the capitol, and running beneath the building to the Memorial Bridge, on the east front. With erection of the contemplated State street bridge across the Susquehanna, Hess believes, the vehicular tunnel would not only facilitate access to the state buildings but would provide an outlet for through motor traffic which now must circle the capital buildings through downtown streets to reach bridges over the river.
